Summer 2020

VOLUME 14, ISSUE 7, 2020

Academic Year End Message from the Department Head, Dr. Alexia Bloch

As we wrap up this academic year and look toward the next I am inspired by the resilience, resourcefulness and sense of community among faculty, students, & staff in the Department of Anthropology. Our year was defined by the familiar rhythm of academic rituals and annual professional events. The year began with a transition of Headship in the Department. November brought the joint CASCA-AAA meetings to our city for the first time and with these we had a chance to showcase Vancouver, UBC, and our Department. Early in the year we also bid farewell to Prof. Pokotylo as he retired from the University after 40 years. Now, as the year concludes, we say goodbye to three more colleagues who are retiring after decades of service, teaching, and research; Profs. Shaw, Barker, and Blake have been integral to UBC's intellectual community. We look forward to marking our colleagues' rites of passage and celebrating their contributions face-to-face, hopefully in spring 2021.

Just as the academic year was winding down our classroom learning, research, and broader intellectual pursuits were thrown into disarray. In mid-March with the onset of a global pandemic of Covid-19, UBC, like institutions of higher education across the world, turned to online teaching. This "pivot" in such a short time on the part of faculty, staff, graduate and undergraduate students was truly heroic. The university announced the switch on a Friday afternoon, and by the following Monday we had all moved into a new virtual reality. Faculty and students valiantly worked out ways to wrap up the remaining weeks of the term, even as many struggled with working from home. B.C. Provincial Health Officer Bonnie Henry's no nonsense dictum, "Be kind, be calm, be safe" became an essential daily cadence.

Even as we became more adept with teaching, holding meetings, and celebrating our graduates on-line, we also came together to consider how the Department can meaningfully engage with the movement to decry police violence and systemic racism perpetrated against Blacks, Indigenous peoples, and other racialized groups across North America and beyond. As we look toward 2020-2021, we are committed to expanding departmental initiatives in teaching, research, and public scholarship to address questions of injustice and racialized inequalities.

We are fortunate to be joined in these endeavors by three new colleagues. Prof. Hugh Gusterson, a dedicated public intellectual with expertise in the culture of militarism and science and technology studies, comes to the Department from George Washington University. Prof. Tracey Heatherington joins us from the University of Wisconsin, bringing her deep knowledge of environmental anthropology and her wealth of expertise on the Mediterranean. And Dr. Amirpouyan Shiva, a recent graduate of the University of Minnesota, and an expert on the Persian blogosphere, takes up an appointment as a Lecturer.

Finally, I wish to congratulate students, staff, and faculty on all your accomplishments this past year. I wish you well as you recharge over the summer months, pursue research, or begin preparing for the coming academic year.

Status of Academic Year 2020-21

All courses in the Department of Anthropology will be offered only online in Winter term 1. Many courses will be blended, with asynchronous and synchronous delivery. In Winter term 2, it is most likely courses will continue to be offered only online. However, this is subject to change.

Statement of Solidarity from the Dept of Anthropology, UBC

June 8, 2020

The UBC Department of Anthropology stands in solidarity and hope with protesters in the United States, Canada and across the globe who are risking their lives in the face of state violence and a pandemic to demand racial and social justice.

We condemn the ongoing murders, recent and historical, of Black and Indigenous people whose lives have been lost to police and state violence in a long history of systemic injustice, extending back to the first occupations of these territories by non-Indigenous outsiders. We likewise condemn the autocratic displays of militarized force that have erupted across North America over the past several days, as well as the structurally embedded racism that is particularly exposed by our current crises of COVID-19 and police brutality. Here in Canada, we must all do more to address the longstanding issues of institutional and social racism highlighted, for example, in the Final Report of the National Inquiry into Missing and Murdered Indigenous Women and Girls—released just one year ago this month.

As anthropologists, we are committed to taking part in dismantling persistent legacies of colonialism and white supremacy, within our discipline and in the world beyond it. We seek to create and uphold cultures of equity with space to breathe for all. We pledge to support and reinforce the demands of Indigenous, Black, Asian, migrant, and other racialized communities on the front lines of explicit and implicit violence.

As a Department, we are introducing concrete steps that build on our long-term commitment to social justice for marginalized, and often racialized, people here in Canada and globally. This year these steps include:

- 1) the inauguration of an annual lecture on race and inequality, to be co-sponsored with the Department of Sociology
- 2) a commitment to expanding the diversity and expertise of our research faculty with 2 new positions: one in sociocultural anthropology focused on race and sexuality, and one in Indigenous Archaeology

COVID-19 and my field research in the Rohingya Refugee Camps: Field notes from Cox's Bazar.

By Sultan Ahmed, Ph.D. Candidate

I am doing my Ph.D. research on humanitarian aid agencies working in Cox's Bazar, a district in southeastern Bangladesh which is now hosting one million Rohingya refugees. I started my fieldwork five months ago. I have been busy collecting data in Dhaka, Cox's Bazar, and the Rohingya camps. The COVID-19 outbreak has put a sudden pause on my fieldwork in Cox's Bazar, as I am now back in Dhaka, the capital of Bangladesh, observing the field situation and interviewing respondents via telephone, Skype or Zoom. Over the last 3 weeks, I have observed many changes in the aid work. One important change was that most aid agencies have reduced the number of aid workers and frequency of their visits to the camps. Aid workers now visit the camps mostly to deliver the most essential aid commodities such as food, fuels, medicine, etc. but for other camp-based intervention, they use local and Rohingya volunteers to do work for them in the camps. Overall, the coronavirus has greatly impacted the lives of aid workers and the Rohingya refugees in the camps.

Until today, no COVID-19 cases have been reported among the Rohingya refugees. This does not mean that the Rohingya refugees are not infected or affected by the pandemic. It simply means the coronavirus testing facilities are still not available for the Rohingya. Even for the host population, this testing facility has only recently been established in the government hospital in Cox's Bazar, about 25-40 km from the camps. Many health experts urged government and aid agencies to take immediate action to set up medical and isolation facilities for the Rohingya camps but this has yet to happen. I have seen both local and international media publishing alarming news and views on this. The World Health Organization (WHO) and UNHCR, the UN Refugee organization, have already conducted a situation assessment indicating the Rohingya refugees as a vulnerable group, and organizations have launched an appeal for immediate funding.

GO GLOBAL

Ten Anthropology majors, plus three additional students from other Arts disciplines and Anthropology graduate student Francesca Pegorer, participated in the Go Global Seminar ANTH 403, "Ethnography of Sardinia: Heritage In a Global Context" with Prof. Sabina Magliocco from 3 - 21 June, 2019.

The group stayed in Bessude, Sardinia (Italy), Prof. Magliocco's field site, in home-stay B&Bs. The seminar was hosted by the Museo Medioevale del Meilogu (Museum of Medieval Meilogu, or MuMe), headed by Prof. Marco Milanese of the University of Sassari. Students heard lectures by professors at the University of Sassari, visited historical and archaeological sites, participated in educational workshops at agro-tourism enterprises, and conducted ethnographic research on the ways Sardinians are interpreting and instrumentalizing their heritage in the context of global tourism.

'How are you?' Maintaining wellness during a pandemic...

By Martina Volfova

I live in the Yukon and work for and with Liard First Nation on Kaska language revitalization and documentation as a part of my Phd research. I am currently also writing my dissertation and hope to finish this year.

In these challenging times, we are unable to work with Elders / speakers directly. All of them are elderly and many have various health challenges - they are staying home.

Obviously, we are also unable to hold community events or language classes. We've been trying to figure out some way to keep our language work going, , while at the same time keeping people healthy and engaged. I also wanted to pass on words of encouragement from the Elders to the community.

We've worked with an Elder on various encouragements and staying healthy advice over the phone, and I've created posters out of these phrases. We have been posting these on our Kaska Learners Facebook page and also putting them up in various places in the community. People have been really excited to see them and share them with one another! So that's a little project I have been working on...

Millie Creighton - - From Wisteria Growing to Dragon Boating

Beyond simply providing leisure engagements, many interests and activities people pursue help inspire them in their work, relations, and other arenas. Some pursuits I engage in are wisteria growing and dragon boating. I have trained a purple wisteria along one complete side of my house, and used a cutting from it to grow another purple one across the reverse side of the house that meets and mingles with a white wisteria coming to greet it from the other side. The house was christened at one of the Fuji-kai (wisteria viewing gatherings), Millie-sensei no Fuji no i.e. (Prof. Millie's wisteria house). I include a photo from a previous year's blooming.

UBC Anthropology Department (est. 1947)

ANTHROPOLOGY

Our department is located on the traditional, ancestral, and unceded territory of the x̣məḡḳəỵəm (Musqueam) people

ABOUT US

Our faculty consists of 26 scholars committed to UBC's vision of inspiring people, ideas, and action for a better world. We are internationally recognized for our research, especially our dedication to collaborative research with Indigenous peoples facing inequality across the world.

WHY STUDY ANTHROPOLOGY?

Anthropology gives us the framework to better understand our relationships with one another and our communities. It is an engaging field that offers insights into what it means to be human. Whatever your career path, a degree in anthropology develops the critical thinking abilities needed to succeed, whether in academics or in corporate, non-profit and government sectors.

OUR PROGRAMS

Our research and teaching cover three interrelated streams:

Archaeology

We explore the material remains of the past, emphasizing hands-on experience, through the direct study of artifacts in classes and labs, including the Laboratory of Archaeology.

Sociocultural Anthropology

We have strengths in engaged and ethnographic methodologies and expressive cultures, as well as in language, health, law, migration, social inequality, violence, rights, and place.

Museum and Visual Anthropology

We interrogate cultural heritage, popular culture, art and institutions. We embrace different media and methods including ethnographic film and museums. We enjoy a close working relationship with the iconic Museum of Anthropology (MOA).

RESEARCH OPPORTUNITIES

Our faculty conduct research across the globe, creating unique opportunities for undergraduate and graduate students.

Our students engage in a wide variety of hands-on research, especially via field schools, such as: the Vancouver Island Field School, the Urban Ethnographic Field School, and the Archaeological Field School at Anyang, China, a UNESCO World Heritage Site.

FUNDING

Our students receive a range of financial support and grants, including:

- Vanier Scholarships
- Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council Fellowships (SSHRC)
- Killam Memorial Pre-Doctoral Fellowships
