

Hawthorn LECTURE

2017-2018

Marisol de la Cadena

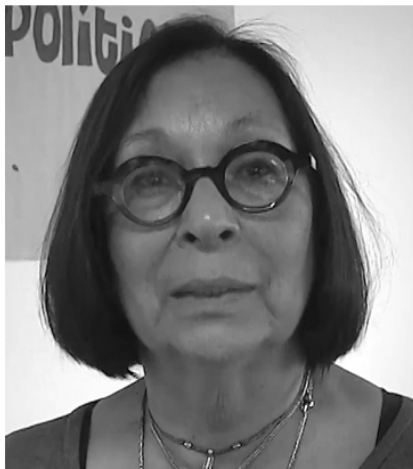

Professor of Anthropology, University of California, Davis
Fellow, John Simon Guggenheim Memorial Foundation

When Nature is not Only Nature?

Stories from the Anthro-not-seen

Thursday, March 29, 5:00-7:00pm

Multipurpose Room, Liu Institute, 6476 NW Marine Drive

Accelerated consumption of minerals, oil and energy as well as the development of infrastructure to make them available for consumption, has led to an unprecedented destruction of what we know as nature. Joining protests in defense of the environment some indigenous collectives have made public that what is being destroyed is other-than-human entities, crucial participants in world-making practices that confuse the division between nature and humanity. Presenting the idea that nature is not only such, the talk discusses an emergent 'politics across divergence,' or the possibility for alliances that require becoming through what Isabelle Stengers has called "interests in common that that are not the same interests."

a place of mind
THE UNIVERSITY OF BRITISH COLUMBIA

DEPARTMENT OF ANTHROPOLOGY